NATURE NOTES:

By Zoe Dalton

from the backyard to the biosphere

Checking Out the World Around You

I must admit that my nature geek rating sometimes ventures into the red zone during these balmy summer months. I search through my plant keys seeking out the diagnostic features that will allow me to identify one plant from another, check out the butterfly charts to see if that one my mom saw in Argentina could be the same one we see in our own backyards in Ontario, and delve into the bird book to see if the little flitting creature that has just passed overhead is native or introduced.

I am often pleasantly surprised when my enthusiasm for such exploration and identification meets with interest in others; I could, after all, understand if my passions seemed a little eccentric to some. But it seems that people, when given the chance, like to learn, to explore, to find out about their surroundings. I thought that, since this is the time of year when so many people venture into the outdoors, I would offer some ideas on what may be of interest to the budding natural explorer.

Even the new kid on the nature guide block gets the sense that the natural world is immensely complex, and that there are more lifeforms than even the biggest of brains could ever truly comprehend. So in this particular article, out of respect for the relaxed and easy-going summer mind, I will stick to plants alone, and to only a few basic ideas for exploring their ways.

Let's start with the basics: learning to simply identify plants. The plants we see around us every day come in a few fundamental forms: trees and shrubs (woody-stemmed plants); grasses and grasslike plants (the most unmistakable of the plant types); herbaceous plants (soft-stemmed plants such as wildflowers); ferns; mosses; and the weird categories like fungus (not really a plant) and lichen (a combo of fungal and algal plant matter).

The first thing you might want to think about when heading out to buy or borrow a plant guide is what group you find most interesting. Many people start with trees, as there are far fewer species in this category than in other groups. In Ontario, for example, there are less than 100 native tree species. Learning many of the common ones by sight is, therefore, a realistic task to accomplish over a summer. Other people prefer wildflowers: exploring the environments in which these beauties grow is itself such a lovely experience.

Such a choice should be based purely on interest. Once you start learning about one category you really like, you'll soon find yourself eager to start learning about all of the others that grow alongside that particular group. For example, if you begin by looking into the world of trees, you will soon wonder about all of the plants that somehow manage to live beneath that shaded forest canopy. If you decide to venture into the wildflower meadow, you won't be able to help but notice the striking grasses growing in association with the flowers themselves.

The next thing to consider before heading down the nature explorer's path is what type of habitat you enjoy spending time in. Do you love that odd bog experience, where the ecosystem's limited nutrient levels necessitate weird and wonderful survival tactics such as those adopted by the carnivorous Sundew plant? Do you prefer the dappled light of a deciduous forest, explored in a comfortable set of hiking boots? Or does the idea of checking out the aquatic plants in the littoral (shoreline) zone of a lake from the comfort of your canoe really get you going?

Completely different plants occupy the various habitat types, and again, your preference as the explorer will guide you to one plant world, and away (at least to begin with), from another. The dry prairie soil can't support tree life, but provides resources aplenty for the well-adapted grass and herbaceous species that call it home. Similarly, dense forests could never support the sunlovers found in a meadow environment, but provide the ideal conditions for delicate, shade-dwelling understory plants that would be outcompeted in a heartbeat in a sunnier environment.

Next on your list of considerations should be what kind of information you would like to find out about plants. Are you simply interested in knowing one from another? If so, you will need to learn some basic plant parts (leaf vs. leaflet; twig vs. leafstem; petals vs. sepals), and some rudimentary terminology that will help you to determine what it is you're looking at (e.g. tree vs. shrub; grass vs. reed).

But you may also be interested in some other elements of the plant world. One great topic, for example, is wild plant edibility. Are you curious whether that plant over there with red berries would poison you or sustain you if you were lost and alone in the wilds? If so, try to get your hands on some resources that will help you find out not only what plant you've found, but what it may potentially taste like.

How about the historical human use of the plant? The indigenous uses of our native flora are fascinating. Were parts of that tree used in technology, for building, toolmaking, etc.? How were those bitter berries prepared to make them not only edible, but highly prized? How were the medicinal qualities of a plant's parts integrated into the spiritual beliefs of our First Peoples?

And last but not least, you might like to look at the relationship between a plant and its environment. Certain plants, for example White Ash in my part of the world, indicate dry areas, while Black Ash indicates wetter habitats. While you do have to learn some basic species ID skills first, your exploration may take you directly into determining the surrounding conditions from just the discovery of a certain plant species.

Whatever route you take in beginning on the road to nature geekdom, have fun. The great thing about learning about nature is that there really are no experts. There are so many organisms, such a diversity of life, that no one can truly claim to know it all.

So go out and explore; don't be afraid of making mistakes, of keying out a plant in all the wrong ways, or of drawing conclusions that make sense to you alone. Ask questions, take pictures, draw sketches, take notes, bring along more books than you should really be carrying or will ever have the chance to look through. It's summer, and there really is no better time to learn firsthand about the wonders around us.

Venture forth and enjoy!

PC SELF UPGRADE AND REPAIRS

Larry Seymour

Part 3

I have provided a list of terms at the end of the article since they are used many times throughout.

ADDING NEW HARD DRIVES

In my last article I mentioned that one of the most popular upgrades is a hard drive upgrade. This week I'll show you how to upgrade your hard drive or add a new one. Before we get into the actual drive addition it is useful to know what operating system you have. Adding a second drive to a computer running Windows ME and earlier requires a boot disk because you will need access to the FDISK utility. Windows NT, Windows 2000 and Windows XP drives are formatted through windows. For replacing your current drive you may not need a boot disk if you can boot from your CD drive and your CD is bootable. Some computers, such as Dell's, have a hidden hard drive partition that acts as a boot disk when the hard drive is formatted. Finally, BootDisk.com has all types of boot disks that one may need. These all require one to six floppy disks depending on your operating system.

Before we start, you need to decide if you want to replace your current drive or add an additional one. If it is an addition the process is usually easier, but your new drive may be faster and bigger and you may just want one drive. You can also replace your current drive with the new one and still keep your old drive. In any case, it's my preference to just keep personal files (web book marks, files in My Documents and any other files that you think you might need) and reinstall all your programs fresh. We have a tendency to collect junk on our computers and starting fresh removes the extra clutter.

After we decide what we want to do with our new drive, we need to see the current setup inside the computer. First, shut it off and unplug everything. Then, figure out how to open your computer case. Some are simple, some are not. For example on my computer my front facing pulls off, I need to undo some screws and then my cover slides off. Others, like some DELL computers, have the side come off or it flips open like a door. Consult your computer manual for instructions on how to open your case.

Once inside we need to identify a few items, such as the current hard drive, which, from what I've always seen, is usually at the front of your computer and has a wide gray cable plugging into it. This same gray cable may or may not plug into your CD drive. Follow this cable back to your main board or motherboard. Here you will find the second item, a long black slot. You will notice that beside it there is another long black slot that again may or may not have a similar cable plugged into it. Also there will be a smaller slot with another cable plugged into it. The smaller slot is for your floppy drive; the long slot is another hard drive/CD drive slot (the number of hard drive/CD slots may vary). For each slot we can have two items or devices connected to it. The cable is an IDE Ribbon and the slots are IDE Interface slots (Some computers, such as older Macs, use SCSI interfaces for drives. Consult your computer manual for information on SCSI configurations and to determine which drive controller type you use). If you have 2 ribbons with one hard drive and one CD drive, one ribbon is plugged into the CD and one into the hard drive. If only one drive is connected you will notice another spot on the cable to connect another drive.

Before connecting a second drive on a cable you must decide if it is going to be drive "1" or drive "2" on the cable. The drive at the very end is drive 1, or the master drive. The other drive then becomes drive 2 or slave. A drive on a cable all by itself is the master. To tell the drive what type it is, you have to set jumpers. Jumpers are little pins that stick out and are covered with a little plastic and metal "cap" that fits two jumpers at a time. For two drives on one cable BOTH drives must be set. The instructions that come with your drive will tell you how to set the drives. The wide IDE cable must be plugged in correctly. On one side, the cable will have a stripe, usually red. That side of the cable is pin one and must be plugged into pin one on both the hard-drive and motherboard. Pin one is marked on both items, though locating it on the motherboard can be difficult. It may be designated by a red mark, by the numeral "1". If the socket is not marked, it is usually the side furthest from the power connection for the drive.

Once your drives are connected you need to plug everything back in and turn on your computer. As your computer is starting, watch carefully for when it tells you how to enter the computer's setup. It will say something like "SETUP F8". Pressing this key during bootup will get you into your system BIOS. Once in your bios, look for a section called "IDE HARD SETUP" or something like it. That area will show you the recognized hard drives. You may have to do an auto detect to see your new drive. If it still does not show up you could have the jumpers set incorrectly or the cables are not plugged in correctly. Shut off your computer and check the connections and jumpers. Once everything is correct you'll see all connected hard drives. Exit and save.

When in the BIOS look for an area called BIOS FEATURES SETUP or something similar. It will contain a line called BOOT SEQUENCE. I set mine for C, CDROM, A. That means the computer will look for an operating system on drive C then the CDROM then A drive. If scrolling through your options you do not see a CDROM you then need Bootdisks or Setup disks for that drive. You should now be ready to format your new drive.

FORMATTING THE DRIVE IN WINDOWS 95,98,ME

Insert your boot disk and exit the BIOS. Once you get the A:> prompt type FDISK. To print off an example of using FDISK go to <http://www.computerhope.com/sfdisk1.htm>. You can now format the new drive by typing format d: or format c: depending if the new drive is C or D. Make certain you select the correct drive, as formatting erases all information on a drive! If the new drive is C you will now need your windows disc to reinstall windows. If your new drive is D then after formatting, just reboot your computer.

When reinstalling windows you will need access to your CD from the boot disk. At the A:> type D: and hit enter then type "dir". If the contents look like it's your hard drive then type E: and hit Enter. Once on your CD drive, type setup and hit enter.

FORMATTING THE DRIVE IN WINDOWS NT, 2K, XP

After setting the BIOS if the new drive is C, insert your Windows CD. If you can boot from a CD, just restart, if NOT you'll need the setup disks. Just follow the prompts and you should be ok.

GLOSSARY

BIOS - Basic Input/Output System is a collection of routines stored in ROM. It is the connection between the hardware (disc drives, memory, floppy drives etc) and the operating system.

Boot disk – A disk used to boot your computer when no operating system is present.

IDE - Intelligent Drive Electronics or Integrated Drive Electronics is an interface for a hard drive or CD Rom.

IDE Ribbon – The cable used to transfer data between the device it is connected to and the motherboard.

IDE Interface slots – Is where the IDE Ribbon connects to the motherboard.

Windows Tips

Is the Windows shutdown sequence a pain? Here's how to make a one-click shutdown.

Navigate to your Desktop. On the desktop, right-click and go to New, then to Shortcut. You should see a pop-up window instructing you to enter a command line path. Enter one of these as the path:

If your operating system is Windows 95, 98, or Me: C:\windows\rundll.exe user.exe,exitwindows

Use this path if your operating system is XP: SHUTDOWN -s -t 01

If the C: drive is not your local hard drive, then replace "C" with the correct letter of the hard drive. Click the Next button. Name the shortcut and click the Finish button.

Now whenever you want to shut down, just click on this shortcut and you're done. Also, if you want to make life better and faster, you can right-click the new shortcut you just made, go to Properties, and type in X (or whatever letter) in the Shortcut Key box.

GUILTY PLEASURE

Busby LeClair

Okay, I confess that I'm a Scooby Doo fan. I have, in fact, seen pretty well every episode of the animated children's series ever made, from Scooby Doo and the Haunted House to Scooby Doo and the Loch Ness Monster. I am anxiously awaiting Scooby Doo and the Headless Dental Hygienist, and was shocked and dismayed when the first Scooby Doo live action film failed to sweep the Oscars. For a long time Shaggy, Scooby's scaredy-cat, clearly pot-addled owner with a perpetual case of the munchies, was a personal role model for me. I don't need you to tell me how sad that is.

For years I kept this shameful secret to myself. Eventually, though, the internal anguish became too great. I wondered if other, seemingly mature and intelligent people might share my affection for the members of Mystery Inc. I mentioned it, as casually as I could, to a hoity-toity acquaintance who claimed to have some appreciation of film. I don't think I would have received a more uncomfortable reaction had I admitted to a particularly troublesome case of venereal warts.

Perhaps my situation would not be quite so pathetic if my addiction to a ludicrously lowbrow cartoon were my only guilty pleasure. Unfortunately, there are many more. For one thing, my favourite song of all time is Beth. By Kiss. I also have cassette tapes of every Air Supply album ever made, and I sometimes lock myself in the bathroom with a box of those donuts with sprinkles on top and listen to them one after another, lip-syncing in front of the mirror with a hairbrush for a microphone. On Friday nights. Naked.

On the plus side, the more I speak about this problem of mine, the more I find that, although I may be alone in the bathroom, I am not alone in the guilty pleasures department. A co-worker of mine recently admitted to sneaking out to McDonald's and ordering a sixpack of Chicken McNuggets everytime her boyfriend, a vegan nutritionist, is out of town. Another friend, a doctoral candidate in comparative literature, confessed to a lifelong affection for Harlequin Romances.

In fact, the more I research the phenomenon of guilty pleasure, the more widespread I realize it is, even amongst the intelligentsia of our age. It is a little reported fact that both Noam Chomsky and Margaret Atwood carry suitcases full of Hostess Twinkies with them whenever they're away from home. Jazz and classical trumpet virtuoso Wynton Marsalis is reputedly a die hard Britney Spears fan. Cultural philosopher John Ralston Saul is known to set his VCR to record every episode of Temptation Island.

The moral, I suppose, is that we should be true to ourselves and proud of who we are as people. Or that it's not what we like that defines us, but rather what we aspire to be. Or that a stitch in time saves nine. Or something. Anyway, at least I'm not defensive about all of this. In fact, if anyone's defensive, it's you. Whatever - at least I don't like the Three Stooges. Much.

editor's note: Ok, I'm inspired. Got a guilty pleasure of your own? Send it to [voice@ausu.org for an upcoming Sounding Off column. We've got to have some fun this summer! The first three responses get a free Voice coffee mug.]

Dear Barb:

Now that summer is here I notice a lot of my friends have been tanning. However because of everything I've been hearing about the dangers of the sun I'm a little reluctant to tan, but I don't like looking so pale. Is the sun really that bad for us?

Jennifer in Nova Scotia

Great to hear from you, Jennifer. You have brought up a very important issue. I certainly understand where you are coming from. For years we learned to associate tanned skin with health and beauty. However in reality the exact opposite is true. In fact, tanned skin is actually damaged skin.

Exposure to the sun's ultraviolet rays not only contributes to various forms of skin cancer, it is responsible for 90% of the signs of premature aging of the skin. A frightening statistic indicates that three thousand people still die each year from skin cancer. The majority of these skin cancers could be avoided by avoiding the damaging rays of the sun.

Most sun exposure occurs during childhood, as children spend so much of their time out of doors. In other words, those sunburns that are a part of so many of our childhood memories are cumulative and a contributing factor to developing skin cancer decades later. Those mostly at risk for sun damage are fair skinned individuals, with blonde or red hair. It seems brunettes have some protection, although they are still vulnerable to the sun's damaging rays, but maybe to a lesser degree.

There are several things you can do to protect yourself from the sun, although I'm sure you are familiar with most. For example, wear sunscreen daily with SPF of at least 15, avoid the midday sun and wear sunglasses to protect your eyes, as they are also vulnerable to the harmful rays of the sun.

Nevertheless, there are other ways to get that tanned look without all the risks. Sunless tanning products are improving constantly. Manufacturers are working diligently to perfect these items, so that when applied properly you can achieve a natural, streak free tan. As well, there are many spas and clinics that will apply a sunless product for you. This procedure is called an "airbrush tan" and requires an experienced person with the proper equipment to apply it.

Another alternative is a method that appears similar to the traditional tanning bed, in that you either lie down in a bed or stand up in booth, and a sunless tanning product, which is 100% UV safe, is then sprayed on, taking only 60 seconds. Your streak free tan will last up to seven days and the products used are FDA approved and have been used in the food or cosmetics industry for decades. However these applications are not cheap, so it may be best to save for that special occasion.

Even though you may not feel comfortable with your non-tanned skin, in 20 or 30 years there is a good chance you may be envied for your smooth, unlined skin.

Thank you, Jennifer, for asking about a topic that I'm sure many are considering at this time of year.

WRITING MYSTERIES

The day that Doreen's husband announces that he is leaving her for a nineteen-year-old nursing student happens to be the first day of Summer. Nina is away camping with friends. Beams of sunlight pour down like cream coloured banners onto the living room rug, illuminating the pages of the Sunday paper. She puts on her clogs and goes into the backyard to water the peppers and the carrots. Poppies and black-eyed susans stand in neatly arranged rows and lazy bees swarm around her ankles. An hour later, Doreen drives to the shopping mall for vodka and sleeping pills.

Back home, she balances a transistor radio on the edge of the bathtub and falls asleep to gardening tips on the CBC. Days later, in the hospital, they arrange appointments with counsellors and social workers. They tell her she's lucky to be alive.

In Vancouver, affordable housing is a problem. She has a part-time bookkeeping job, and makes a little extra by cleaning houses. The only place in her price range is a bungalow in a bad part of town. It has cockroaches and leaky taps and fuses jammed with tinfoil. But it's close to the major bus routes.

At night there are screams in the alley, the sound of shopping cart wheels on gravel. To fall asleep, she reads mystery novels and listens to sentimental songs on the oldies station. She paints the kitchen ivory and yellow; plants rosemary in a cracked teapot.

The first spring in her new home she digs up a part of the backyard for vegetables and flowers and uncovers seventeen used needles, a headless doll, some old condoms that remind her of the jellyfish that used to wash up on the beach in front of her parents' cabin.

Her ex-husband drops their daughter off on Friday nights and picks her up on Sunday afternoons. Nina is almost fifteen now. She has green hair and heavy make-up and low-plunging tops and black gloves with the fingertips cut off. She is pale and sullen and bored and inhumanly beautiful. Usually they argue about report cards, boyfriends, curfews. Sometimes they share a plate of fries at Helen's Grill and go shopping for costume jewelry at Sally Ann.

On Tuesday nights Doreen attends a creative writing class put on by the school board. She thinks she might be able to write a pretty good mystery. The instructor is a published poet and short story writer, maybe twenty-five years old. He has a motorcycle and a master's degree from U.B.C. She writes nearly every night, long into the night, but somehow her characters never really come alive.

The instructor tells her to write about what she knows. She writes about stealing apples from a farmer's field and performing in Christmas pageants. She writes about making love in the back of a Fargo wagon, about getting pregnant at eighteen, losing the diaper money at the laundromat, selling pot to make enough money to cover the rent. The words come flooding through the end of her pen. She writes about swimming naked in a cold running river, about heat lightning in the sky above Williams Lake, about her daughter's asthma attacks, about love and regret and betrayal. She writes about the way that sunlight feels on your arms, the way that a mother and daughter can occasionally share a joke.

She writes about how the best times are when you smile for no reason, and suddenly feel that you might, sometimes, be lucky to be alive.

WHAT'S NEW ON PRIMETIME

AMAZING RACE – Wednesdays – 9pm on CTV

Last week, Jim and Marsha made an early mistake, which caused their elimination.

This week, teams depart in the middle of the night and head for a bus station where they must purchase tickets. Mirna butts in when Colin is talking to the only person in the building. On their way to the bus stop, Chip and Kim get lost, but in the end, all teams arrive before the ticket counter opens. Colin finds out that a second bus leaves three hours after the first bus, but because of fewer stops, arrives at the same time. This second bus also has more comfortable seats.

While waiting in the line absolutely everyone argues with someone, but the most prominent talker is Mirna. Colin and Christie bought the last four sets of tickets on the second bus and gave them away to three other teams, to ensure that Charla and Mirna would not be permitted on their bus. Other passengers include Brandon/Nicole, Chip/Kim, and Marshall/Lance.

While waiting for their bus Colin/Christie visit a travel agency and pre-book the earliest airline tickets to St. Petersburg, Russia. Brandon and Nicole get on the next plane directly to St. Petersburg and Marshall/Lance and Chip/Kim travel to St. Petersburg on the third flight, but stop in Madrid. Kami/Karli team up with Linda/Karen on the fourth flight to arrive in Russia and end up on the same plane as Bob/Joyce. Bob and Joyce end up with an England connection before St. Petersburg, thus arriving later. Charla and Mirna make the mistake of booking standby tickets on an early flight, and end up being the last team to depart. However, their flight from Madrid to St. Petersburg also hosts Marshall/Lance, and Chip/Kim putting them on the third flight to arrive in St. Petersburg.

When they arrive at the Aurora in St. Petersburg teams encounter a Detour. Their choice: Block 5 shots (in hockey gear teams must defend a net from professional hockey players) or drink 1 shot (travel further to Anchikov Palace where they must drink one shot of vodka from a glass balanced on the edge of a sword). As Brandon and Nicole are very faithful, they opt to block 5 shots, whereas Colin and Christie quickly drink their vodka and hit the road. The other teams to defend the net are Charla/Mirna and Bob/Joyce, while Marshall/Lance (make the mistake of walking to the clue), Chip/Kim, Kami/Karli, Linda/Karen choose to drink some vodka.

After completing the Detour teams must find the bronze Monument of Peter the Great for next clue which leads them out of the City to Busheikin where they must find the Old Tower Restaurant. Here they encounter a Roadblock: One team member must eat one kg of caviar. Christie and Nicole have a lot of trouble getting the caviar down (Nicole says it is like swallowing a loogie). Chip downs it in ten minutes.

After completing the Roadblock, teams travel by horse drawn sleight to the Pit stop: Catherine's Palace.

In order of arrival the teams are:

1. Chip/Kim
2. Colin/Christie
3. Marshall/Lance

4. Charla/Mirna
5. Brandon/Nicole
6. Linda/Karen
7. Kami/Karli

Despite that they're the strongest and most in love couple I've ever seen in my life, Bob and Joyce are the last team to arrive at the pit stop, and are eliminated.

BIG BROTHER 5 – Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays – 9pm on CBS

Last Saturday, Drew put Holly and Nakomis up on the block. On Tuesday, Nakomis won the power of veto and used it on herself. Afterwards, Drew put Adria up in her place. The four horsemen argued all week about what happened, and in the end it came down to almost unanimous, after Drew, Scott, and Michael saw Jase and Holly getting a little too close. On Thursday the vote was seven to one, Holly was evicted.

The HOH competition was a test of endurance – who could hold a button down the longest? The first five people to fail at the task selected a card off of a board, which determines the house's groceries for the week. On Thursday we were left not knowing what was to happen.

On Saturday we found out that Diane won the HOH competition and immediately attacked the four horsemen, putting Scott and Jase up on the block.

See what happens with the power of Veto, on Tuesday, August 3rd at 9pm.

PROJECT DNA: This Thursday Adria and Natalie's secret will be revealed to the house guests, provided no one finds out on their own first.

CANADIAN IDOL – Wednesdays, Thursdays - 9pm on CTV

The Top Ten: Each week we'll review what song each finalist sang, what I thought (not that anyone cares), and what the judges thought.

This week the theme was Songs from Britain.

Jacob Hoggard – "Space Oddity"

This kid is outrageous. Dressed up in drag, with props and everything, he kept the judges entertained and definitely amused. He'll be around for a while.

Theresa Sokyrka – "There's a Kind of Hush"

This small town prairie girl is way too bland for my taste. If she added a little flavor she'd be a sensation. The judges warned her of the consequences of choosing the wrong song. If she doesn't step up, she'll be home in no time.

Kalan Porter – "House of the Rising Sun"

Kalan sang this song during his first audition for Canadian Idol. He's cute, and has a great voice. His stage presence isn't that of Jacob Hoggard, but he's very talented. The judges agree.

Joshua Seller – "Where the Streets Have No Name"

This guy can sing, but he's not the greatest looking one of the bunch, that's for sure. I found that he relied too much on jumping up and down. The judges didn't hate it, but I'm not sure they were really impressed either.

Kaleb Simmonds – "Tears in Heaven"

Too many riffs. He's got a great voice, but he tries too hard. The judges, however, thought it was a soulful masterpiece. I think, he needs to have his eyes worked on – he looks like he's ready to unleash a semi-automatic on the audience.

Jason Greely – "Saturday Night's Alright for Fighting"

He's still hot, and a great singer, but not amazing. He doesn't connect with me the way Jacob and Kalan do. The judges defended his ability to portray who he is, and insisted to Judge Zack Werner that what he shows is what he is. They encouraged him to keep it up.

Elena Juatco – "The First Cut is the Deepest"

She missed quite a few notes. The judges were divided in half. I'm on the more negative side of their half. She's got to go.

Shane Wiebe – "Something about the Way You Look Tonight"

He's too bland for me too, but it was better than last week. The judges agreed. But that didn't save him from the bottom three.

Manoah Hartman – "Sweet Dreams"

She sang worse than Marilyn Manson. The judges agreed and Canada sent her home to Regina.

Brandy Callahan

This week's bottom three: Manoah Hartman, Kalan Porter, and Shane Wiebe.

Who went home? Manoah Hartman

FOR LOVE OR MONEY – Tuesdays – 10 pm

Didn't watch it, but a reliable source informed me that Chris went home because of a lack of romantic chemistry. Also, Morgan exchanged cheques with Caleb. The new values are below. We're left with the Final Four.

THE MEN

Caleb – Realtor, from Tempe, AZ	$1.00
David S. – Sales Representative, from Miami, FL	$1.00
Mike – Corporate Financial Sales, from Santa Monica, CA	$250,000.00
Morgan – Sales, from Chicago, IL	$1,000,000.00

ELIMINATED

Chris – Fitness Professional, from Tempe, AZ	$250,000.00
Alex – Industrial Engineer, from Omaha, NE	$500,000.00
Josh – Real Estate Project Manager, from Lake Tahoe, NV	$225,000.00 (spent $275,000 on date)
Rudy – Mortgage Broker, from Newburyport, MA	$1,000,000.00

LAST COMIC STANDING – Tuesday and Thursday, 9PM

On Tuesday there was a wild card show, where the first five comics kicked out of the game performed on stage and then the phone lines were opened up for Americans to vote for the funniest.

On Thursday America's votes were revealed and Jay London returned to the finals.

This Tuesday, the Final Six square off in another live performance. Watch John, Gary, Kathleen, Tammy, Alonzo and Jay bring their best.

DON'T MAKE ME COOK

Like most women, I have a large collection of cookbooks in my kitchen. I've got the requisite Company's Coming series, the 4-H 2 volume set, the school's millennium project cookbook, assorted Weight Watchers cookbooks and more. Heck, I've got David Poulsen's "Cowboy's Country Cookbook". Autographed.

I've got leaflets, booklets, photo copies. I've got shared recipes on index cards and scraps of paper. I've got product tie-in recipes ripped off cans and boxes. I've got recipes from Mother, from friends, from television and magazines. Recipes promising good nutrition or sinful indulgence. Recipes promising mouth watering results in only 30 minutes. Recipes calling for eye of newt and wing of bat. And all beautifully illustrated with luscious photographs of meals artfully arranged by food stylists.

The one definitive title, however, is Peg Bracken's "The I Hate to Cook" book

Though it was written forty years ago, I do remember as a new bride in the mid '70s, thinking it spoke to me. With chapter headings like "The Leftover -- Or Every Family Needs a Dog" and "Company's Coming -- Or Your Back's to the Wall." It's funny stuff. Bracken points out, quite correctly, "that some activities become no less painful through repetition: childbearing, paying taxes, cooking."

It made good reading. And I even tried some of the recipes which is more than I can say for many of the cookbooks in my collection.

It's not that I actually hate cooking per se. It's just that it's not that important to me. It's more a gender duty, an obligation as wife and mother. And don't think it's easy to confess all this. Even in 2003, in some circles, much of a woman's self-worth is measured by the flakiness of her piecrust, the tenderness of her pot roast, the lightness of her omelette. I don't make these rules and I certainly don't have to accept the results.

I can appreciate the passion and talent of all the Martha Stewart wannabes. I can even grudgingly admire those women who live to cook. I just don't happen to be one. I console myself with the fact there are many things I can do that elude others. I can paint a beautiful landscape. I can write a powerful sentence. I can solve problems. I can make people laugh. In the big picture, I'd put those talents up against any bread-baking-shish-kebob-skewering-mushroom-stuffing-cake-decorating woman anywhere.

I've seen one episode of the Iron Chef and think it's asinine. I know cookbooks and cooking shows have huge followings and tremendous economic spin-off and that's great.

I've tasted some wonderful food. Food to die for. I've also been in settings where food is measured by the lineal foot as opposed to the taste factor.

I've been in fine restaurants where presentation and the fawning of the servers is almost more delectable than the two tiny roasted potatoes, three baby carrots, one asparagus tip and paper-thin prime rib entrée.

Recent survey results show the majority of people, at 4 P.M., have no idea what's for supper tonight. That's me. Didn't thaw anything out. Didn't pick a recipe. Didn't buy the ingredients. Haven't got a clue.

So, yet again, I'm praying for an invitation out. The charity of strangers. A church supper. Anything. From where I sit, just don't make me cook.

DUDE, WHERE'S MY CAR
(2000)
Film Review

By Laura Seymour

August is Comedy For Dummies month

I have to admit I saw this silly film on cable and wasn't terribly interested in it. The one main problem was that I wasn't in the demographics they were aiming at which appeared to be 15-25 and a bit slow mentally! Then a half hour in along came Fabio the Italian-born model! Holy crap his cameo was funny! My husband and I watched the one upping scene between the four people in the two cars and promptly killed ourselves laughing. From what I know of Fabio this is ANYTHING but what the quiet gentleman is like. Public affection isn't on his list with his ladies. It made the scene even funnier! So when I saw this silly comedy on DVD I ran out and bought it just to keel over laughing at Fabio's scene again.

There are of course many other things to think about with this film. Ashton Kutcher plays Jesse and is sweet to look at. His body is absolutely ripped -- skinny, but ripped. Seann William Scott is Chester. Chester is also sweet but his body is a bit more normal.

Anyway, the absolutely brilliant plot runs like this... Chester and Jesse find out that they went to a party the night before and can't remember where they left their car! I'd love to have heard the pitch to the studio for that one!! So anyhow, some writer took acid or something and decided to add in a problem that they have to solve before they get to their car. The problem is a group of aliens need to retrieve their device that saves the Universe and apparently these two boobs have it! Of course if they don't get it back soon the Universe will blow up. Oh dear.

So anyhow, now there is a second group of guys trying to get the "continuum transformer" and of course they are Arnold Schwarzenegger types. What else would be in outer space? They have thick Austrian accents, appear to be robot-like and wear matching leather outfits. Naturally the plot complication is that the continuum whoozit is nowhere to be found and the people chasing it can't identify what it looks like! So of course the two heroes are caught by evil bad guys and given ultimatums, temporarily caged and made to clean up the mess they made at their girlfriends house at the party they don't remember.

The party has nothing to do with the major plot points. The "major" plot points are kind of blurry and the problem is the script is loosely for the retarded folk who won't take any consideration of that. Sorry folks, like I said I bought a copy! I know that makes me mental too.

Somewhere in the midst of this a transsexual stripper and "her" boyfriend get into this. I am impressed that the fun was non-stop and the plot somehow managed to survive.

The music is up to the minute and funky. A party scene is a blast of laughs and the silly jokes with guest comedians are hilarious. This film is never going to win any serious awards but it is fun and I recommend it as your start to Comedy for Dummies month. Enjoy.

NEWS ACROSS THE NATION...

By Karl Low

On the Rise

If you recently started with Athabasca University, sometimes it's easy to feel like you're alone in your program. However, Statistics Canada recently issued a report showing that you are anything but alone. According to the report, university enrolment was at a record high in 2001/2002, and had its strongest increase in ten years of 4.3% across Canada.

Looking at this a little deeper we find that the provinces that had the largest increase in the number of enrolments was British Columbia and Manitoba, both at about 7% growth. Conversely, in Newfoundland and Labrador and Prince Edward Island, enrolments actually decreased slightly.

For Manitoba and BC, I can understand what happened. A quick look at the University of Calgary's paper [PDF] on Canadian Tuitions shows that BC's Arts tuition actually decreased 2.2% that year (just before the deregulation) and that Manitoba's tuition basically stayed the same, with an increase of only 0.1%.

Here's the weird bit. Newfoundland and Labrador that year saw a decrease in Arts tuition of 10%, the largest decrease across the nation, yet they are also the province that had the largest decrease in enrolment at the same time. Enrolment in Newfoundland and Labrador decreased 1.2% over the same period.

So what's going on here? The answer is actually fairly simple. Enrolments are decreasing in Newfoundland and Labrador because the population overall is decreasing. The provincial migration reports show us that during those years, the population declined by almost the same percentage as enrolment and that most of those who left were those just entering into the age where they'd start post-secondary education. Obviously if the students aren't living there, they're not going to enrol in a physical university no matter how low tuition goes.

For us at AU though, what's interesting about this is that while the AU strategic plan calls for a growth of 10% per year in enrolments, we see from Statistics Canada that 4.3% is a record setting increase. Obviously the only way to maintain this rate is to convince potential students that AU is more of a value than any other Canadian university. With Ontario implementing their tuition freeze, AU has their work cut out for them.

Time to Go Electric

It's funny how in Alberta, a province that is supposedly resource rich, our gas bill will now be higher in the summer than it is in the winter. The Energy Utility Board of Alberta recently verified that natural gas is going to cost over $6.50 per gigajoule in the month of August for Alberta residents. This price is significantly higher than Albertan's had to pay during the winter months, as from November to March, the government's rebate program to hide the costs of privatization kicks in. In fact, for at least the month of August, the Alberta price of natural gas will be higher than the average price of gas across the nation last winter.

I suppose so long as you don't bother doing your dishes or taking a shower it doesn't really matter, and maybe that's what the provincial government is hoping will happen. Either that, or I expect we'll soon see another rebate program put into place so that we can pay the gas company through our tax bill rather than our gas bill.

On the bright side, if the cost of energy keeps going up like this, it'll soon not only be more environmentally sound to go with alternative power sources -- it'll be cheaper.

ENGLISH-ONLY PROGRAM EXCLUDES FRENCH-SPEAKING GUIDE DOG

Debbie Jabbour

A visually-impaired student has won his battle to be admitted to the English immersion summer school program at the University of New Brunswick. Initially the university had barred Yvan Tessier from admission since his guide dog could only understand commands in French. As part of the English-only format of the program, students are not to communicate in any other language during the course and must mingle in the English community. Tessier enrolled in the program and was accepted, but when he later informed the university that he was visually impaired, he was told the university could not properly prepare for his special needs at this time.

The university had asked Tessier to agree to communicate with this guide dog in English, but Tessier claimed it was not possible to do this type of training in a short time. In the university's response to Tessier, they stated that "some of the program's academic and administrative requirements were not met, and adequate advance notice of Mr. Tessier's intent to attend this particular session was not given."

Although the university advised the student that they could not accommodate his needs for this particular five-week session, they do make special arrangements for visually impaired students when they have sufficient advance warning.

Tessier immediately went to the media and threatened to inform the human rights commission. The Mira Foundation, who had trained Tessier's guide dog, stated that this was a case of discrimination, that the university only rejected Tessier because he was blind (Edmonton Journal, July 7, 2004).

Several days later the university reversed its ruling, allowing Tessier to attend the program. In a press release, the university stated that "both sides have accepted some responsibility and have made concessions" that were mutually satisfactory.

A review of the admission regulations for the highly-successful immersion program indicates that all participants must agree to sign a pledge to use English only during the program. While it seems that there was insufficient communication on both sides, all too often individuals are very quick to cry "discrimination" when nothing of the sort has occurred. Fortunately the matter has been resolved and Mr. Tessier (and his dog, presumably) will be able to enjoy the benefits of the program.

Opening Hours
Tue-Sun 9.30am-5.30pm
(until 9pm Fri & Sat)

The Metropolitan Museum of Art focuses on dress and its aesthetic interplay with art, furniture, and the broader decorative arts between 1750 and 1789.

Presented in the dramatic setting of The Wrightsman Galleries, the Museum's French period rooms, the show explores the dressed body's spatial negotiation of the 18th-century interior as a "choreography of seduction and erotic play". So for example, the coquettish Polonaise dress with its hem raised to reveal the ankle will be set aside a side table that transforms into a dressing table through mechanisms similar to the gown's hidden ties.

NEBUTA MATSURI

Aomori, Aomori, Tohoku, Japan

1-7 August 2004

Demons, spirits and mythical warriors on floats crowd the streets of Aomori every year in August, as Japan's answer to the carnival in Rio takes off and more than three million visitors flock to the city to take part in the wild celebrations and dance in the streets.

The festival is both a celebration of the short northern Japanese summer and a preparation for the harvest. Nebuta means drowsiness, and it is believed that the purpose of the festival was to wake people up for the task of harvesting in the fall. Whether this is true or not, you certainly won't be drowsy while the festival is going on. More than 200,000 haneto dancers, chanting "RASSE-RAH, RASSE-RAH", gyrate wildly to the beat of drums, shouts and flutes and the cheering of the crowds.

BETTER PATHWAYS TO VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL EDUCATION

Ongoing

New online forum to discuss education and training issues

The Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) believes that Canadian secondary schools are so focussed on preparing people for the academic stream that they are not providing preparation for a vocational pathway. The topic "Pathways to Vocational and Technical Education" addressing the questions above will be the first issue tackled on a new Online Forum launched by members of the Canadian Alliance of Education and Training Organizations (CAETO). Further topics will be announced every four to six weeks.

The Online Forum (<http://www.caeto.ca/forum>) is intended to be an exchange of ideas on national issues in education and training. Members intend it will act as a focal point to highlight exemplary practices and propose innovative approaches to a range of long-standing and emerging concerns. An external moderator will review contributions and summarize the discussion. Those summaries will be posted on the CAETO website. CAETO will undertake to bring the results of the discussions to the attention of relevant public or private sector organizations/agencies to move issues forward.

This project is funded by the Government of Canada's Human Resources Partnerships Directorate.

For further information, contact: Gail Larose, Secretary-General, CAETO, Telephone (613) 235-8570, Fax (613) 235-7420, E-mail admin@caeto.ca
